Welcome Message

Dear CES Community,

The world is beset, at the moment, by images of insecurity: earthquakes in Japan, democratic action and reaction in the Middle East, and landslides of accumulating debt. We are literally and figuratively on shaky terrain. The recent upheaval has also unsettled Europe, as nation states—struggling with fiscal solvency—are coming to question the supranational structures of governance that have fundamentally changed the lives of millions of people. It is, therefore, fitting that the theme of this year’s conference considers transnational structures and their impact on the European population, and the capacities of political units to join forces for collective purpose in an unsteady world.

Transnational Europe has proven contested terrain in recent years, with sharp disagreements over the scope, depth and strength of both supranational political units and linkages among diverse ethnic groups sharing regional space. Coordination—once celebrated as the great virtue of the European model—seems increasingly difficult to attain. While politicians have charted an uneasy course between political coordination and economic liberalization, some citizens are taking full advantage of the opportunities offered by the single market while other segments of the population struggle to grasp—and sometimes have come to reject—their transnational identities and shared cultural bonds. Therefore, we encourage our members to take this opportunity to reflect on the on-going transformation of Europe’s societies, the future of coordination, the openings for social solidarity, and the path forward for the European experience.

Cooperation within the Council for European Studies, however, is alive and well; and we celebrate our first conference outside of North America as an opportunity to broaden our community, strengthen our multinational ties, and expand our core mission!

We have received tremendous support from a wonderful network of foundations, research centers, professional organizations, and fellowship programs. Our heartfelt thanks for their warm hospitality and support go to our gracious hosts, the Institut Barcelona d’Estudis Internacionals. We would also like to note the generous sponsorship of the Universitat de Barcelona, Universitat Ramon Llull, the Spanish Ministry of Science and Innovation, and the Generalitat de Catalunya.

The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, the Society for the Anthropology of Europe and the Luso-American Development Foundation have likewise made monumental contributions to the study of European culture and society by funding our pre-dissertation fellowship program. And we would like to thank them also for their continued generosity and patronage.

We also wish to thank our extraordinary new director, Siovahn Walker (Ph.D. in Medieval History from Stanford University), who has worked with us since October to improve enormously the administration of the Council and to strengthen its position in our intellectual world.

Finally, we give special thanks to our members, who have worked so hard to make this conference a success; in particular, we thank the exemplary conference committee, the executive committee, the local organizing committee, the Mellon Fellowship committee, the Perspectives on Europe editorial board, and the research network organizers. With a record-setting number of proposals, the program committee has gathered together a tremendous community of scholars and we hope that you enjoy the feast of ideas that awaits us here in Barcelona.

Warmest regards,

Europe is a zone of tremendous diversity. Migration within and to Europe has generated multicultural societies across the continent. Europe's citizens are ruled through an intricate maze of multi-level governance that ranges from the local level through pan-European and international legal structures and institutions. In the realm of political economy, corporations, industries, and states operate in distinct ways in different settings. While the former Eastern Europe has been reunited with the West, the backgrounds of these two regions have often dictated dissimilar trajectories into the contemporary era. Historians have focused on exploring not only distinct national paths to democratization, but also European countries' connection to former colonies or to minorities within their borders. For the Nineteenth Meeting of Europeanists, we are particularly interested in having participants reflect on and explore the variety of diversities within Europe: political, administrative, legal, geographic, economic, social, cultural, intellectual, and identitarian. How do these differences operate as sources of conflict, of exciting ideas, of growth, or of misunderstanding? To what extent does thinking about Europe's diversities enhance our understanding of Europe as a whole?

For the 2012 conference, the Council for European Studies (CES) welcomes proposals for panels, roundtables, book discussions and individual papers on the study of Europe broadly defined. We encourage proposals in the widest range of disciplines; in particular, we welcome panels that combine disciplines, nationalities, and generations. The Committee will accept only two submissions per person. Members may also participate in a maximum of two sessions.

We strongly encourage participants to submit their proposals as part of an organized panel. Full panel proposals will be given top priority in the selection process by the program committee. Participants may find it useful to connect with like-minded scholars through the growing number of CES networks, links to which can be found here: http://www.ces.columbia.edu/research/research.html

Proposals may be submitted from August 15 to October 1, 2011. Participants will be notified of the Committee's decisions by December 1, 2011. Information on how to submit will be posted on the CES website and disseminated through its newsletter. To subscribe to the CES newsletter visit: http://www.ces.columbia.edu/

For decades, social scientists have behaved as if the European Union were just a political and institutional umbrella standing above national states and societies. However, the notion of a timeless and perfect coincidence between political and societal boundaries is debatable throughout European history, and has been most severely tested during the last forty years. The softening of European state borders and transformative effects of globalization have strongly encouraged the development of transnational social ties and solidarities.

Thus, this panel will address questions respecting the current and future character of European society. How far along are we in the process of transnational social change? How much further is Europe likely to proceed along this road? And, how likely it is that transnational European social groups will form with distinctive lifestyles and outlook?

Plenary Session:

Where are Political Parties in Europe and Where are they Going?

Are political parties still the primary vehicles of popular participation in democratic politics? The evidence from across Europe is the source of considerable contestation among political scientists. Some scholars argue that new cleavages are emerging to restructure politics, and that parties continue to be accountable to their voters. This perspective has been challenged, both by those who question whether these new cleavages have any permanence, and by those who see a growing disconnect between how parties govern and how they represent societal interests, a conflict which fatally undermines the accountability of parties to citizens.

In this plenary, panelists representing a variety of these viewpoints will discuss what we know about parties and what we can expect to see from party competition over the next two decades.

To be Followed by a Reception
Life seems nasty, brutish, and short in the twenty-first century, and the great virtues of the European model—coordination, equality, social solidarity—are increasingly illusive in our post-industrial world.

Thus the Presidential Plenary explores the forces driving inequality, and the political and institutional impediments to social cohesion and economic security within advanced, industrialized countries.
