Chair's Welcome

Dear CES Community,

Welcome to CES's International Conference of Europeanists! This year, CES returns to the European continent, where colleagues at Sciences Po Lyon, Elico; Université Lumières Lyon 2, Elico; Université Lumières Lyon 2, Triangle; and CNRS, Triangle have assembled an exciting and stimulating program for our 2024 conference.

The return of the CES Conference to France is fitting and poignant. I write these words of welcome on June 6, 2024, the 80th anniversary of D-Day, as representatives from France, the United States, the United Kingdom and other European nations gather in Normandy to commemorate this momentous event. Twenty-five years after D-Day, CES was established to coordinate and promote scholarship on the politics, society, and history of Europe. Equally important, these efforts were transatlantic in scope and purpose, laying the foundations for fifty years of fruitful collaboration between North American and European scholars.

This year's conference theme, "Radical Europe: Violence, Emancipation, and Reaction," encourages us to reflect on the meaning of radicalité in the context of growing political, cultural, and military conflict in Europe. Russia's invasion of Ukraine in 2022 has unleashed unspeakable suffering on the Ukrainian people and prompted the reconfiguration of the European security landscape with the accession of Sweden and Finland to NATO. Radical right parties continue to gain votes and influence across Europe. New forms of protest and mobilization have upended conventional understandings of political participation. Growing numbers of people fleeing persecution, hunger, and insecurity continue to seek refuge in Europe. More than 1,100 scholars from a range of disciplines will present their research on these and other themes vital to the study of European politics, society, history, and culture.

Our two keynote speakers will address topics central to the theme of radicalité. Professor Didier Fassin (Collège de France) will share his research on Europe's externalization of border control to regions south of the Mediterranean to stem the flow of migrants. Fassin's research highlights the violence and injustice inherent in these often invisible policies. Professor Emeline Fourment's (University of Rouen Normandie) keynote analyzes alternatives to the criminal justice system in cases of sexual violence, exploring the potential of experimental approaches to restorative justice.

Next year CES returns to North America, to Philadelphia, where Temple University --- CES's new institutional home--- will host our 2025 conference. The interdisciplinary study of Europe is particularly strong at Temple, and we are thrilled to have found the ideal home at Temple.

Please join me in thanking this year's Program Committee, the Local Organizing Committee, CES's seventeen Research Networks (RNs), the CES Executive Committee, and CES staff for their outstanding efforts in organizing this year's conference.

On behalf of CES, I wish all of you a productive and worthwhile conference, and I hope you will have time to enjoy the cultural and historical sights that Lyon has to offer, as well as the natural beauty of the Auvergne-Rhône-Alpes region.

Sincerely,

Karen Anderson
CES Chair; University College Dublin

Keynote I

Out of Sight, Out of Mind - How Europe Obscures Border Violence

Wednesday, July 3 | 6:00 PM to 7:45 PM | Université Lyon 2 | Grand Amphitheatre - Palais Hirsch

Speaker: Professor Didier Fassin, Collège de France

Chair: Montserrat Emperador Badimon, Université Lumière Lyon 2

Over the past decade, in a context of growing obsessiveness about migration and denial of asylum, the European Union and European countries have developed policies externalizing the control of its borders on the other side of the Mediterranean and even deep within the African continent. The lecture is based on a five-year ethnographic research in the Briançonnais and the Val di Susa, including interviews of ninety exiles coming from Africa and the Middle East. This border between Italy and France, in the Alps, will serve as both a scene, revealing how people face the police and the military trying to stop them and push them back, and a prism, illuminating how their journey are hindered by repressive policies delegated to Global South countries. Thus, Europe's complicity in the violence perpetrated against those who flee persecution or poverty, causing the death of many of them, is rendered invisible.

Didier Fassin (speaker) is Professor at the Collège de France, where he holds the Chair Moral Questions and Political Issues in Contemporary Societies, and at the Institute for Advanced Study, in the School of Social Science. At the École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales where he is Director of Studies, he founded Iris, the Interdisciplinary Research Institute on Society. Anthropologist, sociologist and physician, he has conducted research in Senegal, Congo, South Africa, Ecuador, and France, focusing on moral and political issues. He gave the Roger Moore Lecture on resentment at Harvard, the Tanner Lectures at Berkeley on punishment, the Adorno Lectures in Frankfurt on life, and the Eric Wolf Lecture in Vienna on conspiracy theories. Recipient of the Gold Medal in anthropology at the Swedish Royal Academy of Science and of the Nomis Distinguished Scientist Award, he is a member of the American Philosophical Society. Former Vice-President of Doctors Without Borders, he is currently the President of the Comede, French Medical Committee for Exiles. He edited or coedited thirty collective volumes and authored twenty books, translated in eight languages, most recently The Will to Punish (Oxford University Press), Life. A Critical User's Manual (Polity), Death of a Traveller. A Counter Investigation (Polity), Policing the City. An Ethno-Graphic (Other Press) and, with Anne-Claire Defossez L'Exil, toujours recommencé. Chronique de la frontière (Seuil).

Montserrat Emperador Badimon (chair) is Associate Professor (Maîtresse de conférences) of Political Sociology in the Department of Political Science at Université Lumière Lyon 2. She is currently Marie Skłodowska Curie fellow and visiting scholar in the Centre Urbanisation Culture Société of INRS (Institut national de la recherche scientifique) in Montreal. Her research interests include housing policy-making and contentious collective action against evictions and displacement in Spain and Quebec.

Keynote II

Thinking about Alternative Justice Responses to Sexual Violence. The Case of Anti-Authoritarian Experimentations.

Thursday, July 4 | 6:00 PM to 7:45 PM | Université Lyon 2 | Grand Amphitheatre - Palais Hirsch

Speaker: Emeline Fourment, University of Rouen Normandie

Chair: Isabelle Garcin-Marrou, Sciences Po Lyon

Since 2017 and the #MeToo movement, sexual violence has emerged as a prominent topic in the public discourse across numerous European countries. This has led to contentious debates between advocates for women who come forward with allegations and defenders of the accused men. In this climate, public authorities have often portrayed the criminal justice system as the sole arbiter of truth, with criminalization being presented as the primary tool in combating sexual violence. Yet, both within and beyond the feminist movement, there is a growing skepticism regarding the efficacy and relevance of relying on criminal justice. Questions arise: How can cases of sexual violence be proven? What could justice look like for victims? And what should society do with the accused individuals? Well before 2017, anti-authoritarian activists in Germany, Quebec, and France were facing these same questions. They have sought alternative practices to criminal justice, with varying degrees of success. This keynote seeks to analyze these experiments and their implications for addressing issues of justice concerning sexual violence.

Emeline Fourment (speaker) is an Associate Professor of political science at the University of Rouen Normandie. Her research interests include alternative practices to criminal justice, gender issues, and health movements. She is currently involved in a research project on restorative justice at Sciences Po Paris and another project on the West-German health movement at the University of Constance. Additionally, she co-coordinates the French-speaking research network on gender-based violence, VisaGe.

Her recent publications explore the complex relationship between feminists and physicians (Critique Internationale, 2023) and the transnational dissemination of knowledge on transformative justice within anti-authoritarian communities (in M. Di Donato, M. Fulla eds. Leftist Internationalisms, Bloomsbury, 2023). Presently, she is working on a book examining feminist justice practices against sexual violence within anti-authoritarian communities in Germany, France, and Québec/Canada.

Isabelle Garcin-Marrou (chair) is Full Professor of Information and Communication Sciences at Sciences Po Lyon, and a member of the ELICO research unit, which she directed from 2013 to 2023. She works mainly on media treatment of sensitive socio-political issues (terrorism, urban identities, gender) and on media representations (of women, of territories). She currently heads the EPIC doctoral school (Education, Psychology, Information-Communication), one of three doctoral schools in the human and social sciences at the University of Lyon – Saint-Etienne.

GEF's Knowledge Communities are aimed at advancing political and public debates towards a green, socially just Europe, through establishing lasting networks of knowledge production, exchange and dissemination. They are structured around and with a GEF core expert, who delivers a political stock-take as well as new proposals and ideas for discussion with a wider group of actors (i.e. the Knowledge Community). For this Knowledge Community, GEF works together with Matteo Mandelli, Postdoctoral Fellow at Sciences Po Paris, with a view to address the political drivers for and obstacles of sustainable welfare.

As the climate crisis visibly worsens, sustainable welfare is gaining momentum in the European political and academic debate as a potentially preferable alternative to the prevalent just transition policy paradigm, which is frequently deemed as insufficient. The aim of sustainable welfare is to guarantee well-being within planetary boundaries through eco-social policies. While many studies spend a lot of effort to convincingly justify the desirability of sustainable welfare, much less is known about its political feasibility, hence about the institutional and political conditions that are needed to implement really transformative socio-ecological transitions. The fact that even less transformative just transition policies remain currently rare across Europe and they are often highly contested shows that socio-ecological transitions are politically hard to achieve. Against this background, this Knowledge Community aims to identify the institutions, interests and ideas that can drive or hinder the emergence of transformative eco-social policies. The ultimate ambition is to elaborate a political strategy that could turn sustainable welfare from a theoretical ideal to a politically successful reality.

On the 2 July, we want to test the first contours of such a strategy, which will be presented by Mandelli, and further develop these with the participants. The discussions, held under Chatham house rules, will be reflected in the final output of this work, through the format of a GEF Knowledge Community Political Brief. A light dinner will be served during the meeting.

Imagining Europe in the Postgrowth Era: Towards a Sustainable Welfare Deal | JCMS Annual Lecture

4:00 PM to 5:45 PM - Université Lyon 2 | Grand Amphithéâtre - Palais Hirsch

Speaker: Max Koch, Lund University

Chair: Gabriel Siles-Brügge, University of Bristol and Editor-in-Chief of JCMS: Journal of Common Market Studies

Given the lack of empirical evidence for sufficient absolute decoupling of GDP growth from environmental resource use to stay within planetary limits and meet the Paris climate goals, the lecture invites attendants to imagine Europe in the postgrowth era. The point of departure are critical issues of the European Green Deal such as the EU's continuingly ungeneralisable ecological footprint, accompanied by unprecedented socio-economic inequality. With focus on degrowth the lecture then zooms in on approaches that substitute GDP growth as overall policy target with environmental and social goals, operationalised as planetary boundaries and social floors. Subsequently, it discusses selected eco-social policies from the sustainable welfare literature. These policies target both the currently poor and the rich and are designed to move European consumption and production patterns towards a safe space where human needs are met, and planetary boundaries not transgressed. The discussion addresses structural barriers to this transformation and indicates some ways to tackle these.

Max Koch (speaker) is professor of social policy and sustainability at Lund University, Sweden. He currently leads the interdisciplinary projects Postgrowth Welfare Systems and Economic Elites in the Climate Change Transformation: Practices, justifications and regulations of unsustainable lifestyles in Sweden. He has published widely on degrowth and sustainable welfare, mainly with focus on European societies.

Gabriel Siles-Brügge (chair) is Professor in Global Governance & Public Policy at the University of Bristol, UK. He is one of the Editors-in-Chief of JCMS: Journal of Common Market Studies. His research interests sit at the intersection of EU Studies, International Political Economy and Public Policy, where he has published extensively on the politics of trade and investment agreements.

CES Grants, Fellowships & Awards

Congratulations to the Recipients of the 2024 Carolina de Miguel Moyer Young Scholar Award

This year's Carolina de Miguel Moyer's award honors Tommaso Pavone and Ana Catalano Weeks.

Tommaso Pavone has contributed to our understanding of the judicial and legal construction of Europe. Pavone (Princeton PhD '19) has delivered great scholarship and become a major referent in the field of EU Law and Politics. His work has been published in journals such as American Political Science Review, Law & Social Inquiry, Journal of European Public Policy, European Law Journal, and Law & Society. Pavone's first book (The Ghostwriters: Lawyers and the Politics behind the Judicial Construction of Europe, CUP, 2022) is a tour-de-force, with all the ingredients of great scholarship. Pavone challenges the standard account of the Europeanization of law as resulting from the spontaneous mobilization of civil society litigants and national judges. Instead, he highlights the strategic mobilization of pro-European lawyers to motivate litigants and nudge judges into bringing cases to the European Court of Justice and thus advance the interpretation and application of European Law. Not surprisingly, this book has received several awards, including the Edward S. Corwin Award from the American Political Science Association. Coincidentally, Pavone currently holds a position as Assistant Professor in what turned out to be Carolina de Miguel's last academic home, the department of Political Science at the University of Toronto.

Ana Catalano Weeks has made significant contributions to our understanding of gender dynamics in politics. Weeks (Harvard PhD '16) has quickly become a leading figure in the field of Politics and Gender, where Carolina also made some contributions. Her work has been published in prestigious journals such as the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of Political Science, Comparative Political Studies, and Legislative Studies Quarterly. Weeks' contributions span three key areas. Her first book, Making Gender Salient: From Gender Quota Laws to Policy (CUP, 2022), offers an original examination of the consequences of gender quotas on the substantive representation of women. Additionally, she has explored the strategic reasons behind political parties' voluntary adoption of gender quotas and has expanded this research to include corporate boards. Her second major area of research focuses on women in populist radical right parties. A third emerging research line investigates the political implications of the unequal distribution of mental load. This nascent, promising, and innovative research has significantly contributed to establishing Weeks as a prominent scholar in her field. Weeks' work is characterized by its innovation, thoughtfulness, and robust argumentation. Two notable cross-cutting traits of her research are its multidisciplinary approach and the use of mixed methods. Indeed, her studies span political science, sociology, and gender studies, showcasing an impressive command of both qualitative and quantitative methods.

We look forward to what these two young scholars' curious and creative minds will produce in coming years.
